4. Admission requirements/conditions

- (1) Prerequisite for admission to the master's programme is a positively completed bachelor's degree in Instrumental Studies with the same central artistic subject, as well as an admission examination consisting of an artistic audition. This admission examination serves to determine the knowledge and skills acquired so far in the central artistic subject area, the suitability for the chosen study programme, and allocation of the available study places.

- (2) The applicant must have an outstanding general musical education, artistic expression, creativity, and a developed, open personality with social competence. Flexibility and versatility as well as a willingness to engage in intensive artistic-scholarly activities are also important prerequisites for Instrumental Studies at the Anton Bruckner Private University.
- (3) For foreign language candidates:
- (4) If proof of practical command of the German language at level B1 (of the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages - GER) cannot be provided at the time of the entrance examination, the candidate must submit a B1 certificate of proficiency in German no later than prior to the notification of continuation of studies for the third semester.
- (5) At the applicant's request, a completed bachelor's degree in the same field of study may be replaced by an equivalent degree in the same or a closely related field of study completed at a domestic or foreign university, college, or conservatory. The chairperson of the Study Commission decides on the equivalence in consultation with the Dean of Studies.
- (6) If the recognized bachelor's programme differs in essential parts from the bachelor's programme offered at Anton Bruckner Private University, the chairperson of the Study Commission may link the admission to the master's programme to the requirement to complete individual courses that go beyond the curriculum of the master's programme. These additionally prescribed courses are determined at the beginning of the master's programme; their extent may not exceed 15% of the bachelor's programme offered at Anton Bruckner Private University. The ABPU may set a deadline for the student to positively complete these courses. If a deadline is set, these courses must be completed, at the latest, by the time the student graduates.
- (7) Detailed implementation regulations on the respective current examination contents and modalities are issued by the Study Commission.

5. Duration and Scope of the Degree Programme

- (1) The Instrumental Studies programme is divided into an 8-semester bachelor's programme and a 4-semester master's programme that builds on the bachelor's programme.

(2) The master's programme is completed with the master's examination, which, in addition to the artistic part of the examination, also requires the submission of an academically oriented master's thesis.

(3) The Instrumental Studies can only be completed as face-to-face studies.

6. Courses

The courses of the master's programme Instrumental Studies are grouped into study areas and master's concentrations, from which at least one must be selected depending on the field of study. The areas of study and courses are tabulated. ABPU reserves the right to offer a more limited number of electives or specialization courses than specified in the curriculum if this appears to be justified. The decision on this is made by the deans of studies in consultation with the executive board.

Each student is free to take courses offered at the Anton Bruckner Private University as optional courses beyond the compulsory subjects. There is, however, no entitlement to admission to these courses; the allocation is made according to the possibilities.

11. International Comparability of the Degree Programme

The master's programme Instrumental Studies at the ABPU is comparable to instrumental study programmes at other music universities in Austria and essentially corresponds to most comparable European and non-European study structures of the included departments.

The available master's specializations allow for an additional individual focus depending on the students' environment and interests. The joint use of these master's specializations within the framework of several degree programmes ensures the networking of the study programmes and promotes the willingness to engage in dialogue and the exchange of artistic ideas within the university.

12. Persons responsible for the degree programme

Responsible for the programme are the Dean of Studies of the Artistic Study Area in conjunction with the Institute Directors of BBS, HOL, SAI, and TAS

13. Staff

Regarding the artistic and academic staffing, cf. point 7.1.1 of the reaccreditation application and Annex 7.1, in Annex Volume 3.

14. Research

The master's programme Instrumental Studies aims primarily at the development of an independent artistic personality. The elaboration of individual interpretative approaches by the students and their implementation in concert practice is in any case to be seen as a contribution to the development and opening up of the arts. Critical comparisons of interpretation and literary studies are integrated into the study programme. Workshops with internationally renowned artists are part of the ABPU's permanent offerings beyond the compulsory events anchored in the curriculum. These workshops convey not only artistic but also scholarly approaches to contemporary music interpretation and represent important contacts to the international concert scene in the encounter with the artistic personalities of the workshop lecturers.

The regular participation of teachers and students of the Instrumental Studies programme in inter-institutional projects ensures the desired openness of thinking in the sense of a networking of disciplines and institutes, and requires a high degree of reflective handling of artistic-scholarly materials, depending on the occasion and orientation of the project.

15. Quality Assurance in the Programme of Study

Institute evaluations, general evaluations as well as evaluations of the courses take place in the study programme. Both students and faculty are surveyed in separate evaluations about the conditions of teaching and accessing the arts at ABPU. The study conditions in the relevant ABPU institute are part of a corresponding institute evaluation.

The scheduled semester-by-semester assessment of student success in the ZKFs is carried out in accordance with the provisions of the study and examination regulations.

16. Number of places in the programme of study

The number of places is subject to fluctuations resulting from the qualifications of the students demonstrated in the entrance examination, as well as from the required allocation or the respective orientation according to the branches of study.

17. Student Fees

The amount of tuition fees is set by the executive board after approval by the university council.

18. Space and equipment
